The program will automatically download them and will enable you to choose the desired size of the final image. There are plenty of options to choose from. You can specify the inpainting radius (around which the inpainting will occur) and how often to check the status of the process. After you click on the "Start Inpainting" button, the program starts working. You can choose the mode to perform the inpainting - the "quick" mode or the "full" one. In the first case, the program will perform inpainting on all the image pixels. In the second, the program will check if the pixels of the original image are covered by the mask to be eliminated. If the result is satisfactory, it won't check the rest of the pixels. In the case of unsuccessful inpainting, it will swap the pixels with the pixel from the mask with the value of the same color. In the "off mode", the program simply displays the original image. It works with the most common image formats - GIF, JPG, TIFF, PNG.
